Correspondence of the Morning Herald DENVER, WORTH Co., Mo. } August 25, 1876.

On Friday three desperadoes, Whit and Bowen Denham and John Pella, were carousing in Denver, insulting and assaulting every person who crossed their path, both old and young. Mr. Kent, Sr., had entered a suit against Bowen Denham for killing a valuable dog, but on the day in question, with-drew the suit and paid the costs rather than have any difficulty. Two more desperate looking countenances we have never looked upon; they looked more like demons than human beings. None of the posse were hurt, and the whole community rejoice that the county is rid of two of the most desperate characters that ever infested desperate characters that ever infested these counties, they having set all law at defiance for a number of years. The at defiance for a number of years. The people here say that a few more need killing and then they will have a quiet country. Mr. Pella is under arrest, and many say he acted equally as badly as the two Denhams. When the people of Denver again turn out with shot guns, he will stand a good chance to be recognized. The New York World, in an adroitly worded article, calls attention to the promotion of Fred Grant to the grade of First Lieutenant. The intention of this article, which has been extensively copied, is to convey the impression that the President took advantage of the slaughter of a large number of officers of the 7th Cavalry to promote his son into one of the vacancies. Nothing could be further from the truth. Fred Grant was a second lieutenant of the 4th Cavalry by vacancy in that regiment. The promotion of all line officers is fixed by law and the death of all the Captains in the 7th Cavalry would not have affected any lieutenants outside of that regiment. Young Grant's promotion would have occurred just as it 'ki, had there been no fighting on the dosebud, and his father had no more power to advance or retard it than had the mildest mannered street scavenger in the country.—

Railroad Accident. An accident occurred on the Railroad three quarters of a mile north of the Francis street depot on last Friday, by which two men were killed, a third probably fatally injured, and two oth-ers badly wounded. A wagon containing six persons, was on its way from St. Joseph to a barbeene in the Upper Bottom. In crossing the R. R. at Roy's Branch, where there is a curve, the approach of the train was unknown. As is customary the engine whistled at this point but as there were two musi-cians in the wagon fiddling at the time, it was not heard. "Just as the mules had passed the rail, the cowcatcher of the engine struck the wagon between the fore and hind wheels, lifted it in the air like a feather, and in a moment the body of the vehicle and the men who occupied it were landed at the bottom of the branch: occupied it were landed at the bottom of the branch:

Ben Dorsey, the colored musician, was evidently killed outright by a terrible wound in the head, and internal injuries, the exact extent of which is unknown. William Brainard, who was a driver in the employ of S. I. Smith & Co., had his skull crushed, and received internal injuries of a frightful character, dying at six o'clock yesterday afternoon, although Dr. A. V. Banes employed all the appliances of medical skill for his relief after he was brought to the Francis street depot. Geo. Reed, who is a brother-in-law of Mrs. Francois, the Second street restaurant keeper, received a frightful cat in the head, another in one of his jaws, had his back and side hurt, and the middle finger on his left hand broken, besides receiving internal injuries; he is in charge of Drs. Geiger and Smith. James Hoy, the owner of the wagon, was seriously, but not dangerously hurt, and David Cook received two cuts in one of his legs, three in another, and had one of his arms hurt. Dr. W. B. Craig is attending to the former, and Drs. Smith and Geiger to the latter.

"After the accident the dead and wounded were placed upon the train and brought to the depot, where hundreds of citizens were gathered to lend all possible assistance to the sufferers."
